Emile Hirsch (Into The Wild) and Brian Cox (Troy) play the father and son of the coroners who enter the world of terror during the autopsy on the murder victim. In a small Virginia town, police are called to a horrific crime scene where a family was killed in their own home. In the basement, an even more disturbing discovery is made: a partially buried corpse of a. Police take the unidentified victim to a small family morgue, where they ask owner Tommy Tilden (Cox) to conduct an urgent forensic examination to help establish what happened in the bloodied house. Tommy's son Austin (Hirsch) cancels a date with his girlfriend (Ophelia Lovibond) to help his father perform an autopsy, and the two Tildens began their horrific examination in the basement of the morgue. Working late into the night as they methodically clean the back layers of skin, muscles and bones, Tommy and Austin are puzzled by the lack of external signs of trauma on the victim and the alarming extent of her internal injuries. Increasingly puzzled and frustrated by these forensic anomalies, the couple begins to succumb to late night jitters, getting frightened by phenomena that seem to be lurking in the shadows. As fear mounts and the atmosphere becomes thick with evil, it becomes apparent that the Tildens' fate is intertwined with darkness that none of them can understand. This is Avedal's first English-language film. The film premiered at the Toronto International Film Festival on September 9, 2016 and was released on December 21, 2016 by IFC Midnight. He grossed $6 million at the box office. The critical consensus in Rotten Tomatoes calls it a clever, suggestive spooky thriller. The plot of the corpse of an unidentified young woman was found at the scene of a bloody multiple murder. Sheriff Sheldon Burke finds no signs of break-in, and Lt. Wade suggests the victims tried to escape. Emma visits her boyfriend, Austin Tilden, and his father, Tommy, a small-town coroner. Tommy explains that coroners in the past used to lie bells to bodies to make sure they were dead, not Sheriff Burke arrives with the mysterious body of Jane Doe and tells Tommy that he needs a cause of death by morning. Austin postpones a date with Emma to help Tommy, promising to meet her later that evening. Tommy and Austin perform an autopsy and quickly get confused. There are no external visible signs of injury, but the bones of the wrist and ankle were destroyed. Her tongue was roughly cut, one of her molars was missing, her lungs blackened as if she had suffered third-degree burns, and her internal organs show numerous cuts and scars. Jimsonweed, a paralyzing agent not originally from the area, is in her stomach. The condition of most of the body indicates that the death has just occurred, while the cloud of the corpse's eyes indicates that it was dead for several days. There are other mysterious events. The radio spontaneously changes the station, often agreeing to the song Open Your Heart (and Let the Sun In), and Austin believes he sees people standing in the corridor of the morgue. Investigating, he finds their cat Stanley, mortally wounded. Tommy snaps Stanley by the neck to get him out of his misery before reluctantly burning the corpse. Continuing the autopsy, Tommy finds the missing woman's tooth wrapped in a piece of tissue in her stomach. The fabric has Roman numerals, letters and a strange diagram. Similar symbols are on the inside of her skin. The light in the room suddenly explodes. During the confusion, they realize that other corpses in the morgue are missing. They decide to leave, but the elevator does not work, and the fallen tree blocks the exit door. An invisible figure bruised Tommy in the bathroom. They go back to the autopsy room and examine the corpse again. When the door is locked, Austin breaks it with an axe. Through the hole they see one of the missing corpses. Unable to get to the cremation furnace, they set fire to the corpse in the examination room. The fire spreads rapidly; Tommy puts it with a fire extinguisher, but is disturbed to find the body is not burned. When the elevator turns on, Tommy and Austin try to escape, but the doors don't close. Panicked, Tommy uses an axe against what he considers one of the animated corpses. When he and Austin get out of the elevator, they discover that he killed Emma. Confident that Jane Doe's corpse prevents them from finding out the truth about her death, they return to the exam room. Tests determine that Jane Doe's brain tissue cells remain active, proving that she is still alive. Further study of the fabric determines that the marking refers to Leviticus 20:27, which condemns witches, and 1693, the date of the Salem witch trials. Tommy and Austin believe that in an attempt to punish the witch Salem authorities instead turned an innocent woman into a witch who now wants revenge. Tommy offers himself a corpse as a victim, hoping that she will spare Austin. Tommy's ankles and smash, imitating the wounds of the corpse. As wounds occur to Tommy, the corpse's own wounds begin to heal - essentially ending her curse. The reason why all her tortures were visible only on the inside of her body is that every time Jane heals, her outside, indicating that this process has occurred enough times for her body to look outwardly intact while her internal injuries are still unresolved. Tommy begs his son to kill him to end his suffering. Austin reluctantly stabs his father in the chest. Believing that he hears the sheriff outside, Austin tries to escape, but realizes that the voice - another hallucination. Struck by the vision of Tommy's corpse, Austin moved over the railing and falls to death. Police arrive the next morning and embarrass another unexplained crime scene. The body was taken to Virginia Commonwealth University with no signs of injury. During the ambulance ride, the radio plays Open your heart (and let the sun in) and the big toe of the corpse twitches. After watching the film, Esongal told his agency that he wanted to find a clean horror scenario that resulted in an autopsy. The script previously appeared on the annual Blacklist. Martin Sheen was initially cast as Tommy but pulled out. Despite some prosthetics, the role of the corpse, for the most part, played actress Alven Kelly. Ordal felt that it was necessary to have an actress for the part to help connect the audience on a human level. At some level, the decision was also practical, as Ordal believes that it would be impossible to make some close-up scenes with a prosthesis. Esseral said That Kelly played the most difficult role in the film, and he credited her with making everyone else comfortable on stage. Kelly was the first person interviewed for the role. Suredal said they conducted further interviews afterwards, but he immediately realized that she was right for the role. One of the reasons she was chosen was her knowledge of yoga, which helped her control her body and breathing. Production in the UK began in London on 30 March 2015. Variety's Dennis Harvey called it a taut, but often just a funny scarefest, though he said the climax was unfulfilled. Although he praised the acting, Stephen Dalton of The Hollywood Reporter called the film an unsatisfactory compromise of art house and the exploitation of the film. Richard Whittaker of The Austin Chronicle wrote that Ezraal builds an ominous claustrophobia and then elegantly and anxiously unfolds the riddle. Joe Lipsett of Bloody Disgusting rated it at 5/5 stars and wrote: Ordal masterfully balances the necessary mountain with some well-earned parodies and a foreboding sense of doom. Writing in Dread Central, Ari Drew described it as basically effective. Drew praised the acting, but criticized the film's exposure and script near the end. Writer Stephen King and comedian Michael Legge spoke out in support of the film. References to Jane Doe's Autopsy. British Film Catalog. British Film Council. Received on August 27, 2018.
